Pediatric and Neonatal Critical Care Transport

Program Purpose
Critical pediatric patients that must be transported between facilities require a different level of care from hospital or emergency field patients. PNCC is designed to prepare paramedics and nurses to function as members of a pediatric and Neonatal Critical Care Transport team. Participants will gain an understanding of the unique anatomy, physiology, pathophysiology and special needs of critical pediatric and neonatal patients during inter-facility transport. This course integrates lectures and skill stations to help the participants become familiar with the purpose and mechanisms of hospital procedures during transport.

A variety of lectures will cover commonly seen pediatric and neonate illnesses and injuries that require inter-facility transport related to respiratory, cardiovascular, trauma, neurological, heme/immunology, renal, and gastrointestinal considerations.

Attendees
The Pediatric and Neonatal Critical Care Transport Program is designed to provide the educational foundation required for specialists transporting critical care pediatric/neonatal patients. In addition, it may serve as a springboard for those institutions looking to expand into Pediatric and Neonatal Critical Care Transport.

Faculty
The course faculty is made up of paramedics, nurses, and physicians with extensive experience in pediatric and Neonatal critical care. The University of Maryland of Baltimore County and Kellogg Community College Emergency Medical Services department approve all instructors.
